others to obtain salvation. O how trifling are the moments of anguish'd pain, how inexpressible the gratification of everlasting life. — I reflected on the letters sent to the different Bishops. Was not that done out of selfish motives, certainly of the most selfish ones, and now yet the other letters to Kereg., full of the most blinded ambition.
 Respecting this I deserve chastisement & I shall undergo it, if not too hard, willingly.
 — C. is serious now & rather melancholy, I am serious, too, I am denying I care song & the kind favours we with the enjoyments self-denial ever afford.
 Wednesday July 21 Fallen again thrice. At first in gaing to the conference spoken, secondly more wretchedly in reading Deuterius, thirdly in jostling much in the presence of Br. Ph on my knees & they humbly pardon for such vile transgressions. Yet it must grow better with me. My heart damns me. How can I attain at the enjoyments of children of God in going so on. Now C. is in distress. Will I be resolved enough even to make a sacrifice of my own journey in order to aid him?
 I will and, I trust to God, he will enable me.
 What Paterson says on Martyn: Surely it is impossible for pious young clergymen of the Church of England to read his memoirs without catching a portion of his spirit. Can no one be found, endowed with Martyn's spirit & possessing his qualifications, whom you could send to follow up his labours in Persia? — Suppose now Lee, upon remembering this, invites me to come; suppose ~~the~~ Government gives me an authoritative answer, then the matter is decided. — Oh gracious Lord! If I could do any thing to promote or to impede this all, I should feel disquieted, but Trust it on ~~thee~~ and depend entirely on thee respecting it.

Saturday July 14, 1821 I feel deeply impressed with His mercy. It helped me during these days to hold steadfastly on him. O my God and Lord. What there is ever lasting joy. I received the letter of Kellin from H., remembered that Markes will not answer me and was almost oppressed with sorrow on the wickedness of the world. Looked into the commentary of Melancthon, where he said: Non potest esse interna pax nisi fuerit externa persecutio.
Nec est lapis Cydri omnium bonorum animi affectuum. Nil enim aequè humilia et quæ persecutio. In a glance I beheld Luther, Mel., the fathers of the church, all persecuted, all in a world of perversity. Oh how exceedingly happy am I, to meet with so few disappointments.

Thursday, July 19; 21 Shall I confess to myself what a vile worthless creature I am. The other day I indulged so far to my wretchedness as to read for hours in Betr.
Son after Kellin, visited us and I could venture to speak with him on the Redeemer! Wretched I am!
And if I consider how much my restless mind is roving over the earth. I beguile myself tremendously, for I do indeed never think of my future state, whatever it may be, without turning backward and forward on the judgements of men. However grace is operating now in me more effectually than it did some months before. I have a heart felt longing after piety.
I must become more strictly obedient to Christ within me. If I consider what people will say on my words, how they will revile me, I feel nettled to the quick. Some times ~~at~~ I shudder at the very idea of it. I beg the Lord to turn away from my body those sharp words; but withall I resent,
