5) Christ's image in the soul of man is not only of exceeding great comfort to him that by heavens favour is dignified therewith. But it will even look beautyfull to others, more or lesse, as the eyes of their understanding are opened to see it. There is instance of its having commanded even awe and respect from infidels and the Slaves of Darkness. What effects might not we hope from a due care in our education and Schools, to train youth up in the ways that tend unto the attaining of that happiness. What esteem would such merchants be in in the remotest Countries.

6) There is more wisdom, goodness and power of the Creator in the course of nature, than in any miracle whereby he suspends or changes the course of nature. The restoring of a dead man to life doth not seem to me so wonderfull, as giving constantly life by a continual course of nature in generation and sustentation. It is an unaccountable condescension of the Creator, ^{by changing the frame of nature} to put in mind of him such wretches, as will take no notice of the perpetual instances of his wisdom, goodness and power. Miracles lesse considerable than nature.
